Harry F. Stump, Dutch sculptor, dies in Maine

The Associated Press

WARREN — Harry F. Stump, a Dutch-born sculptor and World War II resistance fighter who moved to Maine to pursue his psychic abilities, died Aug. 28 at his home. He was 75.

Stump created pieces in metal, plaster, wood, stone, clay and stained glass. His work often used elongated shapes and ballet-inspired acrobatic attitudes to depict human movement.

Stump had his work exhibited in many important galleries. His sculptures are in private collections in the United States, England, Holland and South Africa. Owners of his work included such art patrons as the late Wernher von Braun, John Payson and the late actor Robert Montgomery.

After joining the Dutch Resistance at 17, Stump spent five years fighting the Nazis. He was honored by the citizens of Holland for his courageous work.

Amos is also survived by his brother, Gerald Sturgeon; and sister, Amy Peterson of Scarborough and sister Carol Johnson of Sanford.

Predeceased are a brother, William; and sisters, Leona and Jenny Viola.

Amos was employed at Snow's Canning Company at the age of 19 as a laborer and proudly retired with his own office and title of Production Manager after 41 years.

He was a life member of the Governor William King Masonic Lodge; a member and one of the original builders of the Blue Point Congregational Church; served in the U.S. Army; and was a Boy Scout troop leader.

d chief justice of the Maine
m. Thursday in his home at

His health had not been of the best even for some time before his retirement as head of the State's court system in 1949. He had been seriously ill, however, only since his return from a visit in Florida on Dec. 27.

At his death he still was an active-retired member of Maine's highest court. He presided in court for what turned out to be the last time in mid-November, a few days before he left on his trip to the South.

He was the first man in Maine history ever commissioned to the Supreme Court six times, and was the third chief justice of Maine to be reappointed.

At Sturgis' retirement as chief justice after nine years in that job, Gov. Frederick G. Payne praised his "invaluable contribution," his "courageous devotion to duty" and his "consistent determination that justice be carried out in fairness to all people."

Thursday afternoon Payne said: "Maine and all its citizens have suffered a great loss in the passing of Former Chief Justice Sturgis.

"He possessed every quality any human could ever hope for — kindness, love of his fellow men, a keen sense of justice and ability, that gained for him great confidence of all the people."

The law first caught Justice Sturgis' fancy during his undergraduate days at Bowdoin College. On his graduation in 1898, he studied law at Columbia University Law School for two years and continued his studies in the local office of Thomas B. Reed and George M. Seiders. He passed the bar in 1900.

One Of Youngest

Sturgis followed a variety of interests during the early years of his career. In politics he became one of Maine's youngest attorneys general, taking that office in 1917 at the age of 39 and serving for four years.

In his native town of New Gloucester, he served as superintendent of schools for a year in 1901. Later, after entering a law firm partnership here with Charles E. Gurney, former Public Utilities Commission chairman, and Carroll S. Chaplin, ex-mayor of Portland, Sturgis served two terms on the Portland Board of Aldermen.

Sturgis' handsome appearance and oratorical abilities were quick to attract the attention of Republican Party leaders in the state. His vigorous political campaigning for the party helped bring to Sturgis a notable career in public life.

In 1923, this career was capped by appointment of Sturgis to the Supreme Judicial Court bench by Gov. Percival P. Baxter. He was reappointed in 1930 by Gov. William Tudor Gardiner and was given a third term by Gov. Lewis O. Barrows in 1937. He was named chief justice in 1940 by Barrows.

During his active political career, Sturgis was reputed to have been the main cause of the County's swinging to the Republican fold in 1914 and 1916 elections.

Guy H. Sturgis' boyhood ambition had been to follow in the footsteps of his father, a doctor.

Born In New Gloucester

He was born on March 3, 1877, at New Gloucester, a son of Dr. and Mrs. John I. Sturgis. The schools of that town and Auburn gave him his early education. He was graduated from Edward Little High School in Auburn.

Justice Sturgis' distinguished legal career brought him many honors, among them honorary doctorates in law from Bowdoin and Colby College. He belonged to many fraternal and civic organizations, including the Woodfords, Lincoln and Economic Clubs, Cumberland lodge, F and AM, of New Gloucester, Mt. Vernon chapter, RAM, of Portland, and Rocky Hill lodge, K of P, of Woodfords.

He held membership in the American, Maine and Cumberland County Bar Association, and was vice president of the National Association of Attorneys General of the United States when he was this state's attorney general.

He was the father of five children, who with his widow, Mrs. Elizabeth Sturgis, survive him. They are John W. Sturgis, Portland attorney; Frederic S.

Prominent in Republican politics many years, Mr. Sturgis was born at Standish and always maintained a voting residence there, although he had lived in Portland several years.
